SIR,

There are many cases in which payments at Bombay and other places are made by drafts obtained from the Bank of Mysore and the Bank is paid for such draft by cheques on the Bangalore District Treasury. It will be much simpler if a current account is opened with the Bank and a small balance is kept at credit of it to meet such demands. The Bank would also find such an arrangement more convenient as it will be saved the trouble of cashing a number of cheques drawn for paying for drafts which it is requested to issue. Officers of Government and others who have amounts to receive from Government at Bangalore and have their own accounts with the Bank will also find it convenient to take cheques drawn on the Bank itself instead of on the Treasury. I have, therefore, the honor to suggest that a current account may be authorised to be opened with the Bank of Mysore. The account may be opened with a sum of Rs. 10,000/- and the balance ordinarily to the credit of the account may for the present be fixed at that amount. This amount will suffice for meeting the monthly demands on account of drafts obtained from the Bank. The average monthly payment to the Bank on this account during the last 4 months
